BELIEVE IT OR NOT

PETER PANDA had just had a birthday. Now he was eight years old. Eight years old, he decided, was too old to believe in things. So he went to his mother and said, "Mommy, is there really a Santa Claus?"

"Of course, dear," she answered.

"I don't believe it!" Peter snorted.

His mother just shrugged and smiled.

Next he went to his big brother Paul. "Paul, is there really a Superman?"

"Why sure, kid," Paul replied.

"I don't believe it!" Peter snorted.

His brother just shrugged and smiled.

Then Peter asked his father, "Daddy, is there really a Sandman?"

"Yes, indeed," said his father.

"I don't believe it!" Peter snorted.

His daddy just shrugged and smiled.

"Patricia," Peter said to his sister, "are there really angels?"

"Absolutely," she answered.

"I don't believe it!" Peter snorted.

Patricia just shrugged and smiled.

Next, Peter asked his Uncle Percy, "Are there really goblins?"

Uncle Percy said, "Ah yes, ah yes."

"I don't believe it!" Peter snorted.

Uncle Percy just smiled and shrugged.

"Aunt Polly," Peter asked, "are there really fairies?"

"Of course, Peter dear," she said.

"I don't believe it!" Peter snorted.

Aunt Polly just shrugged and smiled.

Peter had run out of questions, so he went up to his room to look in the mirror. He looked at his eight-year-old face. He thought about not believing in things. The face in the mirror looked very sad. Then he thought about believing in things. The face in the mirror looked very glad.

Just then he saw a horse go by with a plume standing straight up on his forehead. He decided to try something, so he ran next door to see the bear cubs.

"I just saw a horse with a horn in the middle of his forehead," said Peter.

"You're making that up," the bear cubs laughed back. "A horse like that would be a unicorn, and unicorns are just make-believe, like fairies and Superman and angels and Santa Claus."

"But . . . but I saw it!"

The bear cubs just laughed some more. "You're so young!" they yelled back to him.

Back up his own stairs Peter bounced. His family was sitting in the parlor. He yelled, "I just saw a unicorn!"

"Well, well!" his family smiled.

This time Peter smiled too. "Is there really such a thing as a unicorn?"

His mother nodded her head. His father nodded his head. So did his sister Patricia and his brother Paul and his Aunt Polly and his Uncle Percy.

"Those poor bear cubs!" said Peter. "I feel so sorry for them. They're not very happy."

"Why?" his family asked.

"Because they're too old to believe —" and as soon as he said it, another thought occurred to him. "—but then why do you all believe? You're older than the bear cubs!"

"It's just that they're too old to believe and too young not to believe!" answered his wise father.

"Oh—" said Peter utterly confused. And then to himself he muttered, "I suppose after I grow up, I'll know what he means!"
